decision making is one of the most important activities in both our professional and our private lives today the literature on the subject has grown considerably over the last fifty years and it now covers many different approaches to the subject these approaches range from that of creating a mathematical model of the decision situation under consideration as in operations research and other forms of mathematical decision analysis to those that are based on human and organizational behavior recently those working in the field have begun to combine approaches to the study of decision situations that arise in organizations in our personal lives and in the communities in which we live this book is an attempt to assist those concerned with decision making to work with this combination of approaches in the past decision problems have been considered according to the conditions under which they arise and to some extent in terms of the approaches available for their resolution writers on the subject who are mathematically oriented have devised a method of classifying decisions based on the type of mathematics that they suggest be used in the resolution of the problems this approach leads to the division of decision situations into the categories of certainty uncertainty risk and competition deterministic models available in operations research have then been offered as the means of treating decision situations in the category of certainty within traditional decision theory common decision principles e.g. the principle to maximize utility generally invoke idealization they govern ideal agents in ideal circumstances in realistic decision theory Paul Weirich adds practicality to decision theory by formulating principles applying to nonideal agents in nonideal circumstances such as real people coping with complex decisions bridging the gap between normative demands and psychological resources realistic decision theory is essential reading for theorists seeking precise normative decision principles that acknowledge the limits and difficulties of human decision making this work updates previous estimates of individual enlistment models investigating the relationship between family individual local labor market and other background characteristics and the decision to enlist the study makes three primary innovations to earlier models first it uses data from the early 1990s while the most recent estimates were from the early 1980s the data report the enlistment behavior of a cohort of individuals from the national educational longitudinal study nels who were high school seniors in 1992 in general the authors find that their coefficient estimates are similar to those estimated by earlier models while the mean levels of the explanatory variables are more often significantly different from those in earlier data second the authors explore the utility of including some additional variables in the model that are more relevant to the 1990s or were not available in early data these include measures of immigrant status criminal behavior drug use in state college tuition and whether parents were in the military the research finds that immigrant status criminal behavior and having parents in the military are significant determinants of individual enlistment decisions third the authors estimate the individual enlistment decision as a three choice decision whether to enlist enroll in college or work after high school graduation in contrast to earlier studies which modeled the enlistment decisions as a two way choice of whether to enlist or not the study concludes that the trivariate choice model dominates the bivariate model because it produces more significant coefficient estimates and yields more insights into the reasons that individuals enlist rather than choosing alternative activities this book explores the question of how the multiplication of judicial decisions on international law has influenced the way in which legal findings in international law adjudication are justified international law practitioners frequently cite judicial decisions to persuade courts interpreting international law are no exception to this practice however judicial decisions do much more than persuading they enable and constrain interpretive discretion instead of taking the road of the sources of international law this book turns to the somewhat uncharted terrain of legal argumentation using international criminal law as a case study it shows how the growing number of judicial decisions has normalised courts resort to them in legal justification and enabled some argumentative practices to become constitutive of international law in so doing it critically revisits the implications of an iterative use of judicial decisions and reassesses the influence of the judicialisation turn on the ways in which the meaning of international law is formed shaped and reshaped by reference to judicial decisions
